Dear Senate Members,

As a public employee I urge you to make changes to the prisoner early release program here in Connecticut.

The short comings of this program have compromised the general public's safety. The news media horror stories that have been reported, are just the more heinous criminal acts performed by these people.

There are numerous acts of questionable legal and moral behavior committed by these people that have not reached the media radar because some of these crimes are consider below the threshold reporting in the media.

It is typical that these released prisoners return to the cities and towns they lived previous to their incarceration. Once these released prisoners are back in the neighborhoods they are monitored by the parole employee's that are understaffed.

This conditions creates issues of questionable public safety in the streets of these municipalities.

A sex offender registry is available on line for the public's viewing.

Perhaps an SB amendment for an online list or registry of early released prisoner and for the offenses that lead to the incarceration should be created. Along with the publishing of these releases in the public notices section of the print media.
